

As usual, Warren Buffet, Janet Yellen, and Tim Cook spent their weekend discussing what you should know about how geography effects technology. On the next page, explain which ideas you agree and disagree with.

“Technology is all about meeting needs. Different people in different places have completely different needs. That is why you see completely different technologies in different parts of the world.”

“Technology is all about resources. Of course everyone wishes they had the same technology, I mean all people have the same needs. The thing is that people in different places have different resources with which to make that technology.”

“Technology in every geographic region is gradually evolving to look like a sleek and smooth Apple product.”
